Long ago a poor man lived near the house of a rich man. The rich man was an oil merchant. He gave the poor man some oil in a bottle.

The poor man was delighted. He brought it home and kept it on a table. He lay on the bed with his eyes fixed on the bottle of oil. He thought, "I can sell this oil and with that money I will buy a horse. I will use the horse to carry goods for others. Gradually I will earn a lot of money. I will be a rich man. When I have earned money, I will buy a big house. I will soon become rich enough to buy a big house. I will marry a beautiful woman and live happily." He was so happy with his train of thought that he kept on thinking further.

"Soon I will be blessed with a son," he dreamt. Now the poor man began to worry. He thought, "What if my son does not listen to me? What if he wastes money?" This thought made him very angry. He got up and began to pace up and down the room. He stopped and said. "If my son does not listen to me, I will slap him."

Deep in his thought he swished his hand in the air. His hand struck the oil bottle kept on the table. The bottle toppled over to the floor and broke.
