3.	1. As hills started to push up once more from the arid pastures, solitary drokbas could be seen tending their flocks. They were a hill tribe. They were well wrapped figures. They would pause and stare at the travelers and their cars. Occasionally they waved at the passing travelers. They lived in dark tents guarded by huge black Tibetan mastiffs. 2. The party was regaining the height. The narrator checked his watch. They crept past 5400 metres. They continued to climb in the bright sunshine. The narrator's head began to throb horribly. It was due to the effect of high altitude. He took gulps from his water bottle to help a rapid ascent. 3. Mrs. Pearson and Mrs. Fitzgerald are two contrasting characters. Mrs. Pearson is a pleasant but worried looking woman. She's in her 40's. Mrs. Fitzgerald is older and heavier. Mrs. Pearson is timid and confused. Mrs. Fitzgerald is a strong and dominating character. The two have sharply contrasting voices. Mrs. Pearson speaks in a light voice while Mrs. Fitzgerald speaks in a deep one. 4. Mrs. Fitzgerald knows Mrs. Pearson's mild and soft nature. She fears that Mrs. Pearson can go soft and feel sorry what she has done. Then everything will go waste. Therefore, she advises her to be tough with them. Only then she can make them work for themselves. 5. George is the husband of Mrs. Pearson. He is about 50. He is fundamentally decent. He is solemn but	2 2 2 2 2
